Objective:

As of April 2017, evacuation orders have been lifted everywhere except in the difficult-to-return zones. Freedom of residence and life have been recovered, but the social and psychological effects due to the long evacuation orders are still present. It is expected that it will take a long time for the social environment to return to a new normal life. Moreover, there are differences in the recovery process among these areas depending on when the evacuation orders were lifted. For difficult-to-return zones, where the status of the evacuation order is still unclear, the situation is even more difficult. As a result, the residents of Fukushima Prefecture are facing very different problems. Over time, it has become difficult for them to grasp the complexity of the situation, and even more difficult to share a common vision of the future of the places in which they have chosen to live.

Therefore, the aim of this dialogue seminar is to exchange views on the current situation, mainly between people who live in the Fukushima Prefecture and have attended previous dialogue seminars. This dialogue will be an opportunity for local people who have faced various challenges over the past six years to exchange their thoughts on the current situation, and on their expectations and hopes for the recovery of the whole Fukushima Prefecture which will inevitably take many more years.
